AutoCAD Architecture is a feature-rich, multi-user, multi-device, high performance BIM application used to create and manage construction drawings. It was originally introduced in 1987, when it was the first such application capable of handling architectural and site documentation at the same time. AutoCAD Architecture is used by architects, engineers, contractors, developers, interior designers, landscape designers, surveyors and other professionals working on any type of construction project, including commercial, institutional, industrial, multi-family, residential, government, and infrastructure projects. Architects and engineers can use it to design architecture, building infrastructure and the overall construction of a project.
