We evaluated the safety and utility of three new contrast media, LIRIS-CMDA, Gastrografin, and L&M-CMDA in 100 patients undergoing upper gastrointestinal endoscopy. LIRIS-CMDA was noted to be effective in improving patient tolerance as compared with the conventional medium, Gastrografin. LIRIS-CMDA was also superior in terms of the endoscopic appearance of the esophagus and the stomach. In addition, Gastrografin was only slightly better than LIRIS-CMDA in terms of tolerance, whereas the dye from the latter was slightly better in terms of visibility. [Neuro-ophthalmological and ophthalmological and esophago-gastro-duodenoscopy diagnosis of patient with Moebius syndrome]. The aim of this study is to increase diagnostic knowledge of this rare syndrome called Moebius syndrome, which is one of the most frequent congenital facial syndromes, and is characterized by mental retardation, facial hypotonia, brainstem lesions and later, without sensory nerve disturbances. The Moebius syndrome is associated to ophthalmological disturbances, mainly adduction contracture. It is rarely associated to esophago-gastro-duodenoscopy (EGD) alterations, which only comprises 2% of all endoscopy complications. The third patient of this paper is the patient with the Moebius syndrome from the Infant Mortality and Congenital Malformations Registry (CMB).

The fourth patient is a girl with the Moebius syndrome from the Center of Neurological Rehabilitation, University of São Paulo.#
