

The first Intel-based Mac computers were introduced on January 10, 2006: the Intel iMac and the first MacBook Pro. For nine months, Apple has been running smoothly. But in July, Apple made the decision to switch to new Intel processors for its top products, as well as the iMac and MacBook Pro. However, in mid-2007, many customers began to report failures in their new computers. They were caused by problems with overheating of Intel processors in older models and with the graphics subsystem in newer ones. In early 2008, many iMac and MacBook Pro owners began complaining that the computer would not turn on after shutting down or rebooting.
