It is a blessing for those who have one too many tabs open in their browser and can't make sense out of all the jumble they've gotten themselves into anymore. Sortify is an extension that should be able to help these people solve their problems once and for all. It simply sorts tabs While there are many extensions that help organize your virtual life better, none manage to help as much as this one does, especially when talking about work within a browser. The magic it does regards tabs, and while it may not be as much functionality as expected, it definitely is enough. It helps and that is what should matter. The way it sorts your open tabs is either by website name or by date and time of opening the tabs. You can choose which way you would like your tabs to be organized simply by clicking on the extension icon, next to the Chrome address bar, and simply selecting your desired way of arrangement. No interface, plenty of functionality With such an important task, you would expect the extension to have a certain number of options and also a nicely integrated interface. In this case, none of that fits the profile. The application's interface does not really exist. It consists of a simple drop-down menu, and that is about it. However, this adds to the functionality of the extension. It's simple, it's lightweight

What's New In Sortify?

The extension is quite simple to use and does not make a big fuss out of itself. You can simply click on the extension icon next to the Chrome address bar, select your preferred way of sorting and then start clicking the tabs that you would like to be placed in the order you want them to be. Simple, right? Sortify is an extension that helps organize your open tabs in a very easy way. It may not be as much functionality as you would have liked to see, but it certainly will help out if you are dealing with too many tabs at the moment. When you are dealing with open tabs, even if it seems like it is a normal thing, you may not have all the time you need to sort them. That is why Sortify is what you should have installed on your browser. It's an extension that is created to provide you with the capability to organize the open tabs in your browser. With this, you will be able to group the tabs that are open by date or by name. If you choose the latter way, you will be able to sort the tabs by their date of opening. This will make things very easy to find as you will be able to see at a glance the tabs that you have opened today and even those that you have accessed yesterday. If you would like to sort the tabs by their name, you can do so by clicking on the extension icon and simply selecting what way you would like to organize them. Obviously, you will have to make a few clicks before you are actually able to see the tabs and those you have opened. You will not be able to see more than ten tabs at a time, though. Once you find the tab you need, you can make the group them by clicking on them and organizing them. If you have more than ten tabs open, you will be able to see them all in one single list. The only problem is that it may not be easy to find the particular tab that you are looking for. You can simply use the search function to find what you are looking for as that is the only option that the extension offers. That said, using the sortify extension will not really make your life easier at all. In this case, a few clicks will be needed to organize the tabs and that is what will be the most difficult part of the process. Once that is over, though, you will be able to see all the tabs you had open and it will be very easy to find the particular tab you are looking for. Though the whole process is simple, it requires you to take your time to do things right. At this point, though, you are able to use the sortify extension to make it easier for you to organize your tabs. The extensions does not have an actual interface, and instead relies on a simple drop-down menu that is very easy
