Well known for walking on the moon, Buzz Aldrin has been using his considerable prestige and influence to bring his plan for a Gateway to Mars to the attention of the global community. In his book, Buzz Aldrin: Cycling Pathways to Mars, he details his plan for a two-stage mission, involving a journey to the planet Mars and then an outbound journey to the nearby planet, Asteroid GBR-9. The plan makes a Mars landing and settlement feasible, and provides a way to launch from Earth. Missions The main missions described in this book are: Mission 1: A Journey to Mars. Aldrin proposes a two-part cycle of missions, beginning with a launch that would place astronauts on a journey around Mars. The first part of the journey would be a lunar-like stage, while the second part of the journey would be a more intense long-duration in-space operation. At some point, to build on the success of the first half, Aldrin proposes a return to the moon's vicinity. Mission 2: A Journey to Asteroid GBR-9. In Mission 2, an astronaut or group of astronauts would travel to GBR-9 and establish a base there. GBR-9 is one of the closest objects to Earth that can be moved towards the moon in less than a day. By placing a base on GBR-9, Aldrin proposes that astronauts could establish a lunar-like or Earth-like base, far from any other object of human presence. These astronauts could then use GBR-9 as a stepping-stone, launching from GBR-9 to a variety of destinations. by Four Tet Lulu's Temple Soundtrack by Four Tet is the twenty-seventh studio album by British electronic musician and producer Four Tet. The album was released on 19 August 2013 as a split album along with his previous album Music for Animals, also on Warp. Background and production A few months before the release of Music for Animals, Four Tet announced a collaboration with the British clothing brand Lulu's. The two parties joined forces in a two-year-long partnership covering design, product conception and packaging. During this process, Four Tet got inspired by the album Music for Animals to produce a soundtrack for the collaboration. The soundtrack was released on 19 August 2013, alongside Music for Animals. The latter acts like a soundtrack; while the former is released as a split EP along with pictures and illustrations that were created during the collaboration. As it stands, the soundtrack is the companion piece to Music for Animals. Release and promotion Warp announced on its blog that a split EP titled Lulu's Temple Soundtrack by Four Tet would be released on 19 August 2013. Lulu's Temple Soundtrack by Four Tet was released on CD through Warp and digitally through iTunes. As with its companion album Music for Animals, the soundtrack would not be physically sold in stores. Four Tet appeared in the introduction of Lulu's advertisements. During promotion, he posted a series of advertisements on Facebook, which were composed of pure black and white stills taken from the film's promotional artwork. Critical reception At Metacritic, which assigns a normalised rating out of 100 to reviews from mainstream publications, the album received an average score of 63, based on eight reviews. Jake Kurny at Opinio Juris called the album "an exceptionally strange record". He named the record among the others, describing it as: "[a] complex marriage of 'loud' and 'soft' qualities, a dark mystical space that clicks along like a keys-one chime after another... as Four Tet clicks through the music he's curated for us to listen to while we click through it at the same time." Track listing Notes signifies a co-producer Personnel Credits adapted from Discogs and the lulu.com site.
