Q: Is it possible to send back the response of a $http.get call in AngularJS I am sending an ajax request to an external API and want to send back the response of the request in Angularjs The request for now isn't a success... but I want to send back the code of the external API. For the moment the service is returning an error because of a bad config in the external API... but for now, the catch works So is it possible to do what I would like with a $http.get call? var myService = {}; myService.postVariable = function(url, data, headers) { var result = null; var request = { url: url, headers: headers, method: 'POST', data: data }; $http(request).then(function successCallback(response) { result = response.data; return result; }, function errorCallback(response) { alert('there was an error :('); console.log(response); }); return result; } Thank you A: Yes, you can return the value from the $http call if it was successful. For example: myService.postVariable = function(url, data, headers) { var result = null; var request = { url: url, headers: headers, method: 'POST', data: data }; var success = $http(request).then(function successCallback(response) { result = response.data; return result; }, function errorCallback(response) { alert('there was an error :('); 0cc13bf012
