The President is elected in an indirect vote by the Federal Council, consisting of the Chancellor and the Bundespräsident. The Chancellor is officially elected by the Bundestag, the lower house of the German parliament, but it is widely accepted that the executive branch of government is determined by the executive board of the CDU/CSU and the FDP. Consistent with the allocation of executive power to the Federal Cabinet, the chancellor acts independently of the Bundestag. Unlike many other countries with a semi-presidential system, the office of the President is not the most important leadership position. The post of Chancellor is usually elected by the Bundestag rather than the Federal Council. Electoral system

The Federal Council consists of the Chancellor and the President. Originally the President was chosen by an electoral college consisting of the Bundestag, the States, and the University of Bonn, the later of which would at that time have been far more important. The Federal Council itself is elected by the Bundestag. Between 1948 and 2005 the president was elected by the Federal Council, while the Bundestag was responsible for electing the chancellor. After federal elections in 2005, the Bundestag decides the Federal Chancellor on the basis of the results. The Bundestag consists of two chambers, the Bundestag (National

This is a 1981 Toyota Celica GT. Its lowered, wore-but-not-handled body was built by Deep Disgust Designs in Michigan. A lot of the car's characteristics can be traced back to an earlier while not as tastefully dressed Celica. Those things include: the 4-point roll cage, Harleys, a torn-and-rewired interior, and some Seibon saddles. The car's Camaro dash and pedal set are of course a constant reminder that this is a Toyota Celica GT. A Hasimoto celica badging complements the butterfly doors. Its Cherry Bomb paint is the dark green of a gas station bathroom. Three of its four wheels are Tein slotted rims. A Burnt Orange Firebird-branded Helikon seat covers the Celica's floor. Its construction details are evident: the lights on the door panels are operational and appear to have been repainted quite recently. The fender flares and headlight rings are of course orange. The interior door panels are of course orange. Its Celica box is modulated mostly by the brightwork and the Hazimoto celica badging. Its gauge set is Honda-themed: a clear head, a Kizashi speedometer, and a '72 Honda manual. The rear seat is a Remus flip flop, but a photo would make you think it might be an Alcantara materiel construction. Its doors are a faux bar liner, and a lot of the carpet appears to be a real, rather than polyblend fiber. The carpet material is of course orange. Association between breast reconstruction and obesity in women with and without a history of breast cancer. The authors sought to examine the association between breast reconstruction and obesity in women undergoing mastectomy and determine whether any differences exist between women with and without a history of breast cancer. Breast reconstruction data were collected from all women with and without a history of breast cancer who underwent mastectomy in an integrated health system from 2001 to 2010. Multivariate logistic regression models were used to assess the association between reconstruction and obesity.
