The PURSUIT trial was designed to study the use of drug-eluting stents (DES) in patients with non-ST-segment elevation acute coronary syndromes (NSTEACS). The trial compared 2 treatment strategies in patients undergoing percutaneous coronary intervention: a conventional strategy of treatment with non-inferiority for mortality of percutaneous coronary intervention (PCI) versus optimal medical therapy (OMT) and a more aggressive treatment strategy with PCI and implantation of DES. The primary endpoint was the composite of death, myocardial infarction, or hospitalization for angina pectoris at 12 months. Of 16,513 patients enrolled in the trial.

I'm just wondering if I can use a normal vShape in SketchUp? What I've seen in online help doesn't say anything about that, but there are a lot of polygons in my vShape. A: Actually, it's relatively easy to make something look like a v shape with shape builder. The problem is all the extra vertices that the v shape has. You can't turn off all the extra vertices and still have a v shape, because the v shape has a bounding box so it doesn't have any vertices, only edges. This article explains how to make something like a v shape in shape builder:
