Story 1: The Lady Prank Callers

A little history lesson

The crossroads of strange meet strange is a potent brew, one that can generate a whole range of psychic phenomenon. Incidents of vital importance are often stored as memories. Cultures all over the world have built upon that understanding, and even if a society itself has long since vanished, there may still be some way to call upon those stories, relive that memory. Stories are powerful; they build upon repetition in the mind, they become as real as anything else. It is not a stretch of the imagination to say that a society can be defined and built on top of a very ancient, very potent collection of such stories. Like any other culture, each society evolves by collaborating, by coming together and exploring each others' stories and teaching each other what they can remember of their history. In such an environment, stories are common currency, and some societies would even view their stories as their reason for being. During the time of the Occult Wars, such an attitude led the commonfolk to mold themselves into militia's, fighters often clad in the mud and gear of the lowest common village denizen. They had no way of knowing what their enemies would have done, what would be needed to ward them off, but it wasn't all strong limbs and hard machismo, they had such a diverse range of abilities,

The game also uses the Unity engine, which makes it platform independent. The editor is very simple to use. All you need is Unity, CSGO and Rollback. No video card is required, just run Rollback. It runs on Windows and Linux. There are a few features missing in Rollback which will be added in the future. So far there is basic weapons support, ammo support, custom recoil, a shop, a matchmaking system and a developer mode. Also there is basic scripting language support with easy to learn C# API. A big request to our community was for a Custom Weapon View to customise weapon view and display. This feature is planned for inclusion. Many players have asked for a skill tree. So we will be introducing one. At launch, we will be supporting this system: Weapon handling, optics, movement, tactics and aiming. Next on the list is a more complex weapon system, and after that we will add a vast array of attributes for gear. The custom weapons part is a work in progress. There are many weapons in the game. Some of them are preloaded and some are unlocked. Some preloaded weapons are modified versions of older weapons. Some preloaded weapons are not even weapons. The weapon editor is very simple and easy to use. A beginner can learn this in a couple of minutes and add and customise their own weapons to a new level. Weapon Handling: The weapon handling part is currently being worked on. Currently the default "steam" feature of custom weapons. There is also a basic spawner for guns in the game. These features will be in the

This will be my eleventh blog post, and the first of 2014. As well as being a guest blogger, I will be doing a regular review of the Netflix original comedy series "Elevenses: The Musical". The show stars Gong Li, the actress from the Godfather movies, and was written by Simon Nuchtern, who also directed and produced the films, in the Scottish burlesque tradition, which combines vaudeville and musical burlesque with traditional musical comedy. It follows a well-travelled English jazz singer who returns to China and falls in love with Zhang Ziyi's character. I wasn't planning on doing a blog about the show until I did a double-take when I saw the trailer for it. There's John Lennon (although he's played here by Russell Tovey), Bruce Willis, Bert Lahr, and even Mrs Doubtfire, playing Madame Cat (and her puppet), not to mention Danny De Vito in a cameo playing himself. Thanks to the great work done by the cast and crew, the rest of the main characters are interesting, in their own way. The story is fairly standard fare, but the script captures well the humour of the initial performance, and the original Broadway cast singers do a great job capturing the feelings of each character, without ever playing-up the obvious (her aversion to folk music) or too tongue-in-cheek (the bawdy songs). The characters Chloe: A London cabaret singer who was invited to perform in Shanghai as a way of warming up to new markets, and fell in love with the city. Played by Nicola Walker, Chloe is charming and very striking, but is lacking in self-esteem. Chloe is also very ambitious, but manages to pull it off in a very endearing way. She has a low-side personality, so it is hard to like her, but we care a lot for her. She also has a drunken capacity (more on this later). One of the best female characterisations on the show. Derek: A gentle British scholar studying Chinese for his PhD, who likes to hang around in Madame Cat's shop. He is initially sarcastic and a little less than genuine, but later develops a genuine affection for Chloe. William Raymond does an excellent job of his characterisation, who is similarly unpredictable. This relationship between the two main characters
