Here you have all my opinions and request. The first 4 complaints, I'll give my opinion for each one: The first complaint, I mostly agree with the error: "a domain name is not a password...." The story of the new fantasy action RPG begins with an unexpected meeting between a noble young woman and a noble young man from a mysterious land known as the Lands Between. After a blood feud, the young man raises an army of undead and the young woman uses magic to conjure a sword known as the Elden Ring. To prove their loyalties to one another, the young woman challenges the young man to a duel to the death. The young woman’s movement was light, her sword was swift, and even in their first duel, the young woman met her match. Despite her skill, the young man killed her with a single blow. With one of the tightest races in recent memory, the outcome of the 2018 midterm elections is in a state of flux. The polls are close, and even some that seemed like safe bets on one side or another have new numbers, as voters make up their minds with just over a week to go in the most consequential election of our lifetimes. The trend lines are changing. With just days left on the clock, candidates are making a final effort to win over voters. The number of general election ads on a single television network has surpassed the number of ads run on all other networks, according to the Media Research Center, a conservative group that tracks TV advertising. And the ads are hitting their targets, said Brett Savory, a polling expert and former deputy director of the National Republican Congressional Committee. "Parties are spending, and it's not just one party -- it's both sides," Savory said. "It's really an amalgamation of all the money and energy of the two parties." Republican strategists involved with some of the most competitive races say the stakes are so high, it would be a mistake to relax or assume a race is a lock. But the goal of the 2018 campaign is to not simply deny one party a majority in the House or Senate, said Dan Cox, director of research for the Republican group, National Republican Congressional Committee. "Frankly, we're focused on making sure we win, not getting to 50 votes -- the president has got a message for us -- and that's a message," he said. Voter participation in 2018 is expected to be lower than it's been in recent years, and that could mean an uptick in the number of undecided and low-information voters, Cox said. To win over undecideds, candidates are making changes to their messages, according to a report by the consulting firm Strategic Vision, which polled a group of midterms-focused strategists, consultants and campaign aides. Some of the top recommendations from that poll: Campaign against public school teachers, and stay away from the candidates' personal lives. "Because that kind of life is personal, the risk of basically publicly embarrassing or staining the candidate and opening the door to the opposition is too high," said Rebecca Sinderbrand, a strategist with the firm, who was quoted in the report. However, even in tight races, strategists say there's still an advantage to being on offense.
