What's new:

A prospector is a person who prospectors. Prospectors may search for gold, minerals, oil or other raw materials or gems during the initial stages of mining, or they may prospect for other forms of resource under the cover of a mining claim. Mineral prospectors search for gold, or other valuable mineral deposits, for sale to financial firms such as investment banks for an estimated $41 billion a year in the world's largest commodities markets. Royalty hunters search for rare earth minerals, which are needed to make things such as weapons and electric vehicle batteries, among other things. Yellow-cake powder (from the uratinite), produced by the Atacama Large Millimeter/submillimeter Array (ALMA), is being utilized as a suitable nuclear fuel alloy for small modular reactors. ALMA's yellow cake uranium enrichment may facilitate efficient small modular reactors production, but also enable nuclear weapons.

Equipment used By country Australia A person who prospectively mines gold in Australia is called an "ongoing prospector" (plural ongoing prospectors). They excavate a prospecting trench, or allow the deposit to be passed up by bores. When a suitable mining settlement has been established, they are called "mining claim". Civil law in Australia recognizes an ongoing prospector as the owner of the minerals within the prospecting area (within the mining claim). Civil law in Australia treats the owners of the minerals within a mining claim together as a body corporate, referred to as a mining title, made up of members, called "heirs" (plural heirs), who hold shares of the mining title, and now also "caretakers" (plural caretakers) who are trustees for the former miners. Civil law in Australia does not treat the owners of the minerals within a mining claim as tenants in common, like the owners of minerals belonging to different persons in a United States mining property. In sum, civil law in Australia treats the owners of the minerals within a mining claim as one body corporate, similar to a family corporation. The personalised entity based in Australia is referred to as a "mining title holder" (plural mining title holders), and multiple parties can join the mining title (purchase shares). A counterpart to the mining title holder in mineral law in Australia is the "mining title owner" (plural mining title owners), which is a legal fiction that exists only in Australia to enable parties to

The game I released a few years ago and finished in December 2007 was meant to be the first GACK remake. Unfortunately, I never managed to get more than a few hundred copies sold. That version of G.A.C.K. was based on the old SG-1000 port of the game by Pitmania. Pitmania was replaced by Gametuxtar, who was in turn replaced by the Finnish developer Wanako. The current version is based on and will remain based on the version 1.0 of the original C64 version. The game is free to play. However, since it started it turned out that there are people who just want to play G.A.C.K. without having to create one. GACK is a game maker, it's not a commercial software. All in all, that's a description of how G.A.C.K. works. How does G.A.C.K. work? The current version of G.A.C.K. is completely rewritten from scratch and runs as a single program. Also, the menu and graphical interface have been completely overhauled. I have a nearly finished remake of Pitmania from the old SG-1000 version on my desktop. That's mostly a proof of concept. I did not rewrite the sprites, but I did re-render the sprites (at lower resolutions) that I made in TileWorks. For the levels I just use plain old tiles I have in my collection of old SG-1000 remakes.

Weird! Although the Fermi-Dirac statistics in quantum mechanics describes the energy-momentum distribution of an electron gas, this striking prediction does not imply that there is a relationship between the thermodynamics of this system and the kinetic properties. This relationship was pointed out by Wigner in his famous surmise of nearly 100 years ago. Thus, it is legitimate to ask whether there is a generalization of the Fermi-Dirac statistics to the realm of non-equilibrium transport. In this note, we provide a quantitative justification for this statement. It is shown that the distribution of work is proportional to the energy gradient. We thus predict a linear heat flux for a system out of equilibrium: This distribution does not result from a Gibbs distribution. In addition, the total energy must increase in order to maintain the Gibbs distribution. We illustrate the validity of our arguments with two very different examples: heat conduction and adiab
