Eclipse no longer supports.zip on Windows I am trying to install a zip file created on Windows to an Android device. I used the built in file manager from the Android SDK and it worked previously. But recently I have tried to install my zip file using that same built in file manager and now it is throwing the following error: You have not requested this and the majority of your files are stored on the server. Please install a copy of the zip file. Anybody else experiencing this problem? A: The error message specifically states that the Zip was not downloaded from Google Play, and further states that Most of your files are stored on the server. Please install a copy of the zip file. Thus, all your stuff is stored locally on the Android device and not on the server. The answer is "no" - you can't install a.zip file in the built-in file manager. The Zip is meant to be downloaded from Google Play and installed on Android devices - not on the computer's file system. You have to get the Zip from Google Play
