Jeppesen Flight Planner Binder - 4 rings, 10001201,.Q: How to return object that has same reference as another object to another function? I'm struggling with this issue. In my main function in class, I have created a mock object. var foo = { id: 0, name: 'fake name' } var bar = foo; In my other function, inside a callback, I would like to return a reference to that same object. However, when I try to return bar, it's referencing foo instead. function myFunction(callback) { foo.id = 1; callback(); } var foo = { id: 0, name: 'fake name' }; var bar = foo; console.log(bar); // returns foo, but I expected bar. I assumed that since myFunction is passing a reference to the object, the callback would return the same reference and thus the result of the function would be the bar object. A: You should be careful of hoisting when you use the let statement in the middle of an assignment expression. Hoisting happens with let and var declarations in an assignment expression: let foo = 10; let bar = foo; console.log(bar); // logs 10 You can use function hoisting to make it easier to write code like this 6d1f23a050
