This invention relates to improvements in the state of the art of fixed electric eye sensors and pertains more specifically to a decorative or ornamental vehicle sensor assembly. In the prior art, one of the techniques for detecting objects in the path of an oncoming vehicle is a fixed electric eye. An electric eye assembly generally comprises a sensing light beam which is reflected from the oncoming vehicle. The sensing beam is directed onto a sensor target in the form of a pair of spaced apart and relatively small sensing elements or photocells. These elements or cells produce a varying electrical output in response to the interruption of the sensing beam by the object. The output of the pair of elements or cells is rectified and amplified and applied to a control circuit which in turn is connected to vehicle control circuits or to the drive circuits for a motor control switch. The light emitting beam is normally interrupted by the oncoming vehicle as the vehicle approaches the fixed electric eye. In the event that the vehicle is a truck, the beam is typically interrupted by the back of the cab and the trailer of the truck. The driver of the truck is informed of the presence of an object in the path of his vehicle by means of a light warning device or buzzer located on the cab. While a fixed electric eye sensor assembly is adequate for its intended purpose, it is not as aesthetically pleasing as a more ornamental assembly such as the subject matter of the instant invention.

Romelu Lukaku and Marouane Fellaini were both guilty of over-hitting balls, leaving Everton and Spurs to go into the international break level at the top of the Premier League. Tottenham, who climbed above Arsenal and Liverpool on goal difference, got the first goal. Fellaini's through ball found Robbie Brady, whose backheel found Andros Townsend. Everton defender Phil Jagielka was fortunate not to see a penalty for a push on Spurs midfielder Benoit Assou-Ekotto. The
