If you're considering a purchase of an iPad Air or iPad mini 2 from the Apple Store, and looking to use it on Photoshop, here's a thought. The iPad Store has a new tablet section that allows you to purchase media tablets designed for use with the Apple iPad platform. If you're using a mid-2014 or newer model iPad, you're going to want the new Adobe Photoshop Lightroom Mobile, which has many of the same features as the standalone Lightroom, but is specifically designed for use on an iPad or iPhone (or iPod Touch). Unfortunately, you can only purchase an iPad for the new Adobe Photoshop Lightroom Mobile, so if you're not purchasing an iPad Air or iPad mini 2 (for the full version of Photoshop), then this is not a viable option. However, I honestly believe that if you're printing media prints of cheap prints or printing for businesses , then this new app is a definite must-have; and at less than $100, you can imagine the ease at which this will be used for the above-mentioned needs. Yes, working with mobile has always been difficult, especially since certain print sizes are limited, but on an iPad specifically there are amazing ways to cut or materialize your images, and working on older iOS versions is becoming infinitely easier. You can even start with the free trial, so keep an eye out while it's still available the next time around. Ok, so this version feels a little sluggish when importing photos from a folder, but the other performance issues are mine. The Python scripting user interface is not friendly and it's a pretty basic user. I'll give it that. It's ugly, even buggy. But there's still some good stuff built into this version. Like the ability to bring in photos by tag. This is only possible if you leave the folder open and Edit > Tag Special, select the tags and choose Location left to right, and Photos left to right. This is the address where the photos are imported from. Where I set it up is a folder under "Last Import Attempt".
